Round 2 review

Points: 90 – so far

It’s been a slightly better round for our team, with 90 points and counting and three players including Harry Kane ($10.5m) as 12th Man to come.

Popular picks like Lionel Messi ($10.0m) and Erling Haaland ($10.5m) performed once again to limit our rank gains – but we at junior ($10.0m) after his 12 pointer.

Round 3 plans: Transfers and booster strategy

We have activated our Wildcard ahead of Round 3 and will be largely looking to target teams with something still to play for.

But we will have to carefully consider our premium picks – and try to work out whether the likes of Messi will start or be rested.

This feels like the most crucial part of Round 3, with a wrong call potentially punished severely. Argentina for example have their easiest game of the group against eliminated Jordan.

Our Wildcard drafting started with looking at the market odds.

The Netherlands, Ivory Coast and Morocco lead the way for goal projections, with the first two of those teams also the best for clean sheet probability.

None of these are through as group winners, which should limit rotation. Covering all three looks sensible in a Wildcard squad.

Argentina and England are two other teams that feature high in the projections – but England would join Argentina in qualifying top if looks the most likely of the top picks to have his minutes limited. We may therefore go without him for one more round.

Vinicius and Mbappe are likely to keep their places in our team. Both have been in fine form and their countries will want a result in Round 3 to qualify as group winners.

We will also look to own at least one Spain attacker, possibly alongside Marc Cucurella ($5.1m) in defence. Oyarzabal has reportedly been carrying a niggle though, while Lamine Yamal ($10.0m) may not play 90 minutes.

There are plenty of options up front in particular. Mbappe is set to be joined by Cody Gakpo ($7.7m) and one other, such as Yan Diomande ($5.9m) or Amad ($5.9m).

Gambling on a start for Deniz Undav ($6.6m) would be more attractive if Germany were not playing defensively solid Ecuador.

The forward punt could therefore be Julian Alvarez ($8.6m) – but his minutes hinge on how heavily Argentina rotate.

The squad will be built around Mbappe, Vinicius, Gakpo and Denzel Dumfries ($5.7m), with a triple up on the Netherlands and Morocco expected.

Diomande has yet to deliver points but should hopefully get a chance to shine against Curacao. It's most likely to be him versus Amad for the third forward spot.

Noussair Mazraoui ($4.4m) qualifies for Scouting Bonus as things stand, while the saving over Achraf Hakimi ($6.0m) helps us to afford Yamal, Mbappe, Vinicius and Mohamed Salah ($10.0m) – the latter faces Iran in Round 3.
