Round 3 review

Points: 82

Our captaincy choice was the standout of this round but unfortunately several other picks disappointed, leaving us with plenty of catching up to do in the knockout stage.

Round of 32 plans: Transfers and booster strategy

We’re planning on activating the Qualification Booster in this round instead of the Clean Sheet Shield, which we’ll likely save for the Round of 16 or quarter-finals.

Our Ultimate Guide details all the latest projections for teams in terms of their odds for the Round of 32, as well as their chances of progressing to the final.

We’ve opted to triple up on Argentina, who are the favourites to reach the final and have a decent-looking draw, while we’re hoping England’s full-back injury concerns give Djed Spence ($4.5m) an opportunity for a start.

Jude Bellingham ($8.3m) joins Harry Kane ($10.5m) after impressing in the group games, however he is the one who could make way if we make any late changes.

Going for an all-star attack, including Ousmane Dembele ($10.0m), would mean going without a France or Spain defender for now.

Budget goalkeepers and defenders make this lineup possible, something we may need to address in future rounds.

We will try to update our team before the deadline if any changes are made.

Update: We've moved on Nahuel Molina ($4.4m) and Spence in an attempt to secure some hopefully more nailed options in Nico O'Reilly ($4.7m) and Lisandro Martinez ($4.6m).

Dembale is downgraded to Michael Olise ($9.5m) to facilitate this.

With our team chasing some mini-league deficits, we may opt for a late switch of Harry Kane ($10.5m) for Jonathan David ($7.0m) or Folarin Balogun ($6.0m) but this will be a last-minute call.
